CATALOGUE NOTE

Small jade cong of this form and size have been excavated from various Liangzhu culture sites, such as three discovered from tomb M20 at Fanshan, Yuhang, Zhejiang province, now in the Zhejiang Provincial Institute of Cultural Relics and Archaeology, see the exhibition catalogue Liangzhu and Ancient China. The 5000 Years of Civilization Demonstrated by Jades, Beijing, 2019, p. 152, M20:1-3. See another jade cong of slightly larger size with comparable carving technique excavated from tomb M21 demonstrating an asymmetrical pierced circular hole, illustrated in Liangzhu yizhi qun kaogu baogao. Fanshan [Reports of the Group Sites at Liangzhu. Fanshan], Beijing, 2003, no. M21:4.

Although the function of these jade cong from the Liangzhu Culture long remained a mystery, they are thought to have had a ceremonial and possibly also a protective purpose.

CATALOGUE NOTE

Ceremonial blades carved from jade form an important object category among jade-working Neolithic cultures. The present simple and plain blade with its carefully bevelled cutting edge is carved from a dark olive-green jade. The edge is ground to a mere 0.1 cm while the thickest point of the blade measures only 0.3 cm.

Similar jade ceremonial blades with subtle differences in characteristics have been discovered from various Neolithic period sites. See a Longshan example with a slightly curved cutting edge (l. 54.6 cm, 0.4 cm in thickness) published in The Complete Collection of Jades Unearthed in China, vol. 14:Shaanxi, op.cit., pl. 8; another (l. 51 cm, 0.3 in thickness) in ibid., vol. 4: Shandong, pl. 24; and a blade attributed to the Shenmu culture in the collection of the Harvard Art Museums (l. 44.6 cm, 0.1-0.2 cm in thickness), included in Jenny F. So, Early Chinese Jades in the Harvard Art Museums, New Haven, 2019, cat. 6B, together with another slightly thicker example attributed to the Qijia culture, cat. 6C.

Large blades with similar perforation configuration, but often slightly thicker, were excavated from Qijia culture sites. A larger green jade blade (l. 65.5 cm), a smaller example (l. 41.2 cm, 0.8 cm in thickness), and a fragment (l. 18.7 cm, 0.5 cm in thickness), all drilled with a row of larger holes and an additional smaller perforation that does not conform to the linear arrangement, but centred on the blade at the butt, are published in The Complete Collection of Jades Unearthed in China, vol. 15: Gansu, Qinghai, Ningxia, Xinjiang, Beijing, 2005, pls 39 and 148, together with a related fragment, pl. 151. A slightly shorter olive green and brown jade blade (l. 45 cm), together with a much shorter example (l. 28.9 cm), systematically drilled with three holes and a fourth one close to the short side, are illustrated in Jessica Rawson, Chinese Jade from the Neolithic to the Qing, London, 1995, pls 10.17-18.
